We thrilled our final thrills, and gushed our final gushes at the Albert Memorial, which represents, beside a number of deceased gentlemen, a quartette of very fast better suited to an Athenian assembly young women riding upon huge beasts, that no well-bred lady would think of mountain at the present day; and it is strange that Victoria will countenance anything of the kind. English riding is certainly a most ungraceful performance. It seems to be the ambition of each equestrian to carry the nose (generally a well-developed feature) as near as possible to the horse's head, without actual contact. Manly beauty is prevalent, thut what an appalling superabundance of the feminine element exists here. It is real-
